

IMPERFECT ON PURPOSE

Both pieces are irregular by design — and in a category that sells flawless, matched and symmetrical, that is an unclaimed position sitting in your own product copy.

READ FIRST — THE SITE CHANGED SINCE YOUR SCREENSHOT

- The offer is not what you briefed. You told me buy 2 = 20%, buy 3 = 30%. The live PDPs say Buy 2 save 10% (BUY2), Buy 3 save 20% (BUY3), best code auto-applied. The locked Sejal script says twenty and thirty and is now wrong. Tell me which is right and I'll correct it.
- Shipping is now free. The PDPs read "Free insured shipping across India", not ₹150. Every script that says "one-fifty delivered" needs that line pulled — it now overstates the price.
- The lariat is ₹1,599, not ₹2,299. Your screenshot shows ₹2,299 / 40% off; the live page is ₹1,599 / 58% off. Ananya must quote the live number on the day she records.
- The ring page calls it "this solid gold band". It is 18K gold-tone plated over surgical steel. That phrase is in the meta description and the social preview, so it is what gets shared. Fix on the site before this ad runs — and no script may repeat it.
- "Last 24 hours: 16 pieces sold" sits on both pages. If that is live and true, fine. If it is decorative, it is false-popularity under the CCPA dark-patterns guidelines. Worth checking who owns that number.
- Both material strings still say waterproof, which your own FAQ contradicts, and the ring's says brilliant-cut zircon when the ring actually holds a tiger eye and a champagne crystal.

HALO CURVE RING

₹2,049 ~~₹3,419~~

- Two stones that deliberately do not match — a natural tiger eye beside a faceted pale champagne crystal
- Each in its own irregular bezel, shaped to follow the stone rather than correct it
- Tiger eye is opaque, banded brown and gold, with a sheen that moves as the hand moves
- ~17mm inner diameter · open-back, adjustable US 6–8 · weight sits solidly across the finger

NECKLACES · DEMI-GOLD · ★4.9 (51)

BAROQUE PEARL LARIAT

₹1,599 ~~₹3,829~~

- 1.5mm gold snake chain through an open 20mm oval
- 6mm round white shell pearl, and a 15mm baroque shell pearl falling at the end
- A slider sets how low the drop sits — the piece changes length on you
- One size, adjustable · baroque means no two are the same shape

IDEA 01 · RING

THEY DON'T MATCH

COLD TRAFFIC
REPORTED SPEECH + CRAFT

"Someone picked up my hand and asked if I'd lost the other stone."

- Beat. Then: "No. They're meant to be different."
- Macro on the tiger eye, tilting slowly in window light so the sheen actually travels across it. Hold it longer than feels comfortable — this is the shot.
- "One's a natural tiger eye. That's why it moves like that. The other's a cut champagne crystal."
- "And each one sits in its own bezel — shaped to follow the stone, not to correct it."
- Hand doing something ordinary — holding a cup, pushing hair back. "Open back, so it fits six to eight."
- "Two thousand and forty-nine. Free delivery, seven-day returns."

Why it's a 10. It is reported speech — the family you already picked — carrying a craft argument nobody in Indian demi-fine makes. Everyone else sells matched and symmetrical; this argues asymmetry on purpose, and the line about the bezel following the stone is already on your own PDP and is better than anything I'd write. The chatoyancy is the rarest thing here: a genuinely filmable property no competitor can fake, because most of them don't use a natural stone. Confirm the tiger eye really is natural before this airs — it is the one claim a rival could challenge.

ONE NECKLACE, THREE NECKLACES

“This is one necklace. I’ve worn it as three.”

- Macro: fingers on the slider, moving it. “There’s a slider. You decide how far the pearl falls.”
- Three hard cuts, same piece, ~3s each — long over a white shirt · mid over a kurta · short and high for a dinner. Same necklace, three completely different necklines.
- Macro on the baroque pearl. “The big one’s a shell pearl, about fifteen millimetres. Baroque just means it isn’t round — so nobody else’s is the same shape as mine.”
- “Chain’s one and a half millimetres, so it sits flat and doesn’t fight a collar.”
- “Fifteen ninety-nine. Free delivery.”

Why it’s a 10. A lariat’s real blocker isn’t price or trust — it’s what do I wear it with, and this answers it three times in ten seconds. Styling content is the proven save-heavy format in Indian jewellery, and saves are the second-strongest ranking signal after watch time — well ahead of comments, which have collapsed to around 3%. It also turns the slider from a spec into a reason to buy. Say shell pearl, not pearl — the honesty is free and the alternative is a complaint.

NOTHING HERE IS PRETENDING

“My friend picked up my hand and asked which stone was the real one.”

- “Fair question. One of them is.”
- Macro, tiger eye: “This is a natural tiger eye. Actual stone, out of the ground.”
- Macro, crystal: “This one’s a cut crystal. It isn’t a diamond and nobody ever said it was.”
- Cut to the necklace: “Same with this. Shell pearl, not a sea pearl. It says so on the page.”
- Both worn together, plain top, good light. “That’s the bit I actually like. Nothing here is pretending to be something else.”
- “Ring’s two thousand forty-nine, necklace is fifteen ninety-nine. Take both and the code knocks ten percent off in the bag.”
- “Free delivery. Seven days to change your mind.”

Why it’s a 10. The category’s central anxiety is is it real, and every competitor answers it by implying yes. This answers it by saying exactly what each stone is — which is the most disarming move available and the one a rival cannot copy without rewriting their own product pages. It is also the natural home for the pairing offer, because it is the only idea that needs both pieces on screen. Pair maths: ₹3,648 → ₹3,283, comfortably above your ₹1,800–2,400 AOV target.

WHAT I DON’T KNOW YET

I have written these in a warm, plain, slightly dry register — but I have not seen Ananya’s content. With Sejal I guessed her register from nothing and wrote six concepts that were tonally wrong. Send me two or three of her recent reels and I’ll tune the lines to how she actually talks before anything gets shot. The structures above hold either way; only the wording moves.

All three are shootable in one session — clean room, window light, tripod, hands and neckline. Shoot idea 03 last, while both pieces are already on.

RULES, ALL THREE

- Never “waterproof” — the FAQ allows incidental contact only
- “Shell pearl”, never just “pearl”
- Quote the live price on the day, and say free delivery now that it is
- Offer percentages must match the cart — see point 1 above
- #Ad top third, frame one, held a third of the runtime — required for gifted as well as paid
- Product on screen at 0.0s · captions fixed at y 1150–1330 · licensed music, no trending audio · no digital silence at the end
